

FX Week

Edgewater Markets opens office in South America

The new branch in Santiago is the seventh worldwide for the non-bank liquidity provider

Santiago base: the new office in Chile will be headed by Jose Antonio Buenano

Mikael Latreille

18 Sep 2017

As part of its global expansion, non-bank liquidity provider Edgewater Markets is opening an office in Santiago, Chile; its first in South America and its seventh worldwide. It will be headed by Jose Antonio Buenano.

Before he joined Edgewater, Buenano headed the derivatives desk for Latin American corporates and financial institutions at Sumitomo Mitsui Banking Corporation (2016–17) in New York. He previously served as chief executive of broker-dealer Tanner Corredores de Bolsa (2014–15) in Santiago, following senior roles at Credit Agricole (2013–14), RBS (2009–13) and ABN Amro (2004–09).

“We are extremely excited to have Jose Antonio join Edgewater,” says Skovran Schreder, co-founder and chief executive of Edgewater Markets.

“His extensive experience will allow us to further build the Edgewater brand and continue to focus on customers’ FX needs. This new region for Edgewater is a natural extension for us, as it allows us to leverage the tremendous growth and success we have had in Mexico, while also filling a gap in FX services in the region,” Schreder added.

“The execution of Edgewater’s geographic growth strategy is helping to ensure our clients have seamless and total access to FX markets throughout the world, providing them with optimal, efficient and low-cost FX electronic execution,” adds Alex Scarsini, co-founder and president of Edgewater Markets.