Edgewater Markets has hired Phil Muldoon and David Fowler in its London office, and Ananda Ariesta and Marvin Ng in its Singapore office.

In London, Muldoon has been handed the role of director of institutional e-FX Sales, prior to which he was global markets director, G10 FX and rates, at the National Bank of Abu Dhabi. Before that, he spent over 17 years at Credit Agricole, most recently as director on the FX trading and e-FX risk management teams. He has also worked at Credit Suisse, Manufacturers Hanover Trust and National Westminster Bank.

Fowler, who joins Edgewater as institutional e-FX salesperson and trader, arrives from Sucden Financial, where he worked for over six years in different capacities, starting in operations within the e-FX brokerage business and then as an e-FX analyst on the sales desk. Fowler began his career at London Capital Group in institutional FX.

In Singapore, Ariesta has been named as director of institutional e-FX sales. Prior to this latest role, Ariesta was an e-FX, treasury and derivatives salesperson and trader at Bank J. Safra Sarasin. Before that, he worked in e-FX, treasury and electronic markets solutions sales at BNP Paribas. Ariesta began his career at UBS in Singapore.

Ng joins as an analyst, arriving at the firm from HSBC, where he worked in operations within the e-FX space. He will report directly to Shilpa Dubey, who heads the Singapore office.

"It's a pleasure to have individuals of this calibre join Edgewater's team. The depth of their knowledge and experience will allow us to further build the Edgewater brand and to continue to focus on customer's FX needs. This is a natural extension for us as it allows us to leverage the tremendous growth and success we have had," says Skovran Schreder, co-founder and CEO.

"The execution of Edgewater's hiring growth strategy is helping to ensure our clients' seamless and direct access to FX markets throughout the world – providing our clients with optimal, efficient and low-cost FX electronic execution," adds Alex Scarsini, co-founder and president of the firm.
